There is a clap of thunder, the tomb breaks open and Ying-tai leaps into the grave, from which the two lovers emerge as butterflies and fly away together, finally reunited.Techniques of the Chinese string instrument, the er-hu, are used by the violin in this concerto and this serves to emphasise the Chinese character of the work. The violin and piano version of the violin concerto is also available (AEGC11). It was first recorded in 1959 with soloist Shen Rong on violin and the Symphony Orchestra of Shanghai Music Conservatory conducted by Fan Cheng-wu.The concerto is in one movement, but is broken into seven distinct sections. Chen later revised the original score in an attempt to intensify the dramatic power of the music by further contrasting both the tempi and the dynamics of the concerto. Written for solo violin and chamber ... Buy the sheet music of The Butterfly Lovers (version for Violin and Western Orchestra) by Chen Gang and He Zhanhao. Only then does he understand what Ying-tai had so often tried to tell him, and in his bitter despair he falls ill and dies. The solo violin launches into a brilliant and difficult passage, supported by chords from the orchestra, but eventually returns to the original melody representing love, accompanied again by the cello solo. The section ends with the suicide of Zhu as the solo violin ends with an abrupt high note.The lovers' parts are united by a final section, with the solo violin and the orchestra redeveloping the opening theme to build to a triumphant climax. Published by HNH International Limited The Butterfly Lovers was written by He Zhan-hao and Chen Gang in 1959 while they were students of the Shanghai Conservatory. In such cases the soloist is often accompanied by an orchestra consisting of Chinese instruments.He Zhanhao is more widely credited for the composition of the concerto. This melody comes from a Chinese folk song of the Yellow River (Huanghe), and tells the story of Zhu Yingtai's childhood. He doesn't know that Zhu is really inviting him to marry her. Choose your format from the selection above. Liang promises to see Zhu again, but Liang waits before doing so.When Zhu returns home, she finds that her father has promised her to the son of a rich family. Liang Shan-po has been studying with Zhu Ying-tai, disguised as a boy, for many years during which Ying-tai has fallen in love with Shan-po who is ignorant of her true gender. Buy the sheet music for violin, strings and wind. The solo violin of the concerto is symbolic of Zhu Yingtai, the story's protagonist, and the cello part is symbolic of Liang Shanbo, her lover.The concerto begins with two fifths in D by the harp, after which a solo flute opens with a flowery melody, setting the scene of the story. This was revealed in an interview of by China Central Television with several artists contributed in the creation and popularity of this piece of work in China and worldwide.The 1959 premiere of the Butterfly Lovers Violin Concerto featured 18-year-old violinist Yu Lina and took place in Shanghai as part of the celebration of the 10th anniversary year of the founding of the People's Republic of China. A solo oboe enters with the strings in G major, after which the solo violinist enters and begins a simple melody. The Butterfly Lovers' Violin Concerto (simplified Chinese: 梁祝小提琴协奏曲; traditional Chinese: 梁祝小提琴協奏曲), along with the Yellow River Piano Concerto, is one of the most famous ... Complete Score PDF 0 MB Piano + Violin (Shengyou Guan) WikipediaThe Butterfly Lovers' Violin Concerto (simplified Chinese: 梁祝小提琴协奏曲; traditional Chinese: 梁祝小提琴協奏曲), along with the Yellow River Piano Concerto, is one of the most famous orchestra works of Chinese music. Music notation created and shared online with Flat. Musically, the concerto is a synthesis of the Eastern and Western traditions although the melodies and overall style are derived from the opera of Shanghai. After a time, Shan-po, greatly missing his companion, attempts to visit Ying-tai's house where he finds out from a servant that Ying-tai is a girl and about to be married. The solo violin struggles against the forces of the orchestra, representing her protests against her father.When Liang arrives, he sees Zhu and realizes that she is a woman, and they fall in love. On learning of the death of Shan-po, Ying-tai visits his grave and in her grief begs his tomb to open. The original version of the concerto has a marked traditionally oriental colour. In the spirit of the Shanghai opera, the concerto, as a whole, conveys on a musical level aspects of a traditional Chinese painting in its light and calm mood. The result is that the later version sounds far more Western and further removed from the Shanghai opera which inspired its antecedent. Arranged for soloist and chamber ensemble, typically consisting of a quintet of wind players and a string quintet, these new arrangements provide soloists with an opportunity to rehearse and perform major repertoire under conditions closely resembling a full orchestral setting. One day, Ying-tai is summoned home, where her family has arranged for her to marry a wealthy neighbour. As the first buds of love begin to blossom, a short violin cadenza using mostly the G-pentatonic scale expresses Zhu's joy of her and Liang's oath of fraternity.The orchestra begins the next section in E major, the violin entering with a fast and jovial melody, representing Zhu and Liang's busy three years of school. The solo violin is accompanied by a harp and other elements of the orchestra. However, his main contribution was the famous opening theme while most of the development was in fact written by Chen Gang. Techniques of the Chinese string instrument, the er-hu, are used by the violin in this concerto and this serves to emphasise the Chinese character of the work. Each tells a different part of the story of the Butterfly Lovers. Zhu invites Liang to visit her family and to court her sister. Another virtuosic section for the solo and orchestra combines both the slow melodies and the fast energetic passages introduced before. About a 6 minute pared down version of the Butterfly Lovers Violin Concerto with all the major musical themes intact. The concerto ends bittersweetly with a final melodic phrase from the solo violin, concluding mysteriously on a high D from the strings. They provide valuable practice for small ensembles to work with soloists and an ideal vehicle for student conductors to work with major solo repertoire. It is an orchestral adaptation of an ancient legend, the Butterfly Lovers. The work is a common feature in figure skating and in concert halls worldwide. Get a printed edition or hire performing material. The Butterfly Lovers Violin Concerto is one of the best known of all contemporary Chinese compositions. Many examples of violin technique are represented, namely spiccato, fast playing over a wide range of notes, and even arpeggiatos, in a standard display of difficulty for a violin concerto.As the end of their schooling draws near, Liang and Zhu grow sad as they realize that their time together is nearly over. Although the concerto is written in sonata form it is also strongly programmatic.
